a theatrical way; as soon as she got a glimpse of the Queen, she screamed out and raised her hands, then threw herself back in a convulsion—Lady H. acted it admirably for us—then approached, stared, and fell back again, sobbed and struggled in hysterics, crying out, "Quelle ressemblance!" At last, down she bounced on her knees at the Queen's feet, and began an apostrophe—"Adorable ressemblance de mon incomparable maltresse ! de mon angelique amie ! "

The Queen was quite petrified, and reproached Lady Hamilton afterwards for having brought her such a tragedy queen. When the d'Osmonds went away, the Queen complained that she had brought on her a terrible corvee, as she was pestered with letters from her, all lamenting her poverty, and begging relief, which the Queen frequently gave.

The Duke of Portland and TEvfque de St. Pol de Leon will not suffer any priests to return to France, to any province where submission is required. They allow of their going to Bretagne, where none is exacted. The Pope's legate, Spina, will soon settle all that matter.

The Duke d'Orleans asked kindly after you yesterday. Madame de Genlis's " Mdres Rivales" is her own and Pamela's story ^ dressed up a sa